IN MENDOCINO.

The breath of the sea and the cypress,
A misty and pungent air,
Shadows of tall trees bending
Into the bright sea glare.

The white spray washing the headlands,
The white gulls wheeling home,
Dipping their wings in the breakers
And treating the swift sea foam.

High cliffs on the edge of forests,
Rugged and bare and steep,
Whence the hunted deer, despairing,
Leaps to the roaring deep.

On the edge of the cliffs the forests,
Up, up, to the mountain high,
Down in the valleys descending,
And rising again to the sky.

Solitudes, lost to the worldman,
Far on the summits bright,
Or down in the trackless canyons,
Dim in the moonlight light—

Dim in the moonlight fullness,
Dark in the day's sweet morn,
No sacred and deep are the canyons,
Where the beautiful rivers are born.

Wonderful forests unbroken,
The wind kissed peaks upon,
That swell to the sunburnt valleys,
And roll to the Oregon.

Shadows winds winding upward
Through the silence solemnly sweet,
So tenderly thrilled when the warbler
Sings in his sure retreat.

Breath of the sea and the cypress,
A misty and pungent air,
Sea voices that seek the forests
To hush into silent prayer.

Lillian H. Shuey in Overland Monthly.

TOLD THE MARINES.

The captain was in good humor, and had even condescended to leave the bridge, joining a knot of ladies, who were comfortably stowed to leeward of the huge cabin skylight enjoying the fine weather and inhaling the pure, invigorating breeze which came in gentle puffs off the land.

The noble steamer, bound to a southern port from New York, had been blessed with a good run, and had rounded bluffs without encountering the proverbial "dirty weather" usually met with at that point. The passenger list was a large one, embracing several celebrities bound to Florida for the winter; the captain had been petted by all his lady guests and he was a tall, sublimed and handsome disciple of Neptune, so that no wonder he was in an unusually high flow of spirits.

"Oh, this is just jolly, captain," cooed one of the young ladies as she made room for the stalwart sailor beside her. "What does the old rhyme say?"

"What ship that goes,
The wind that blows,
And the least that loves a sailor?"

"A very pretty and proper sentiment, and I am now looking for that very sensible loss you."

"Oh, captain," chorused half a dozen of the chattering, "now ain't you horrid? What would Mrs. Belay: delay all! She is not in it. Bless her dear heart, she trusts me as implicitly as I do the compass there in the binnacle. And well she may."

"We'll take your word for it, captain, on one condition," was the quick response of the young lady by his side.

"Name it, and I'll comply, if by so doing I shall establish my reputation firmly."

"Very well, sir. There is but one feature lacking to make this select circle perfect—as it already is charming. We are afloat on the salt, salt sea. The good ship is rolling, and none of us is seasick!"

"So the steward informed me," "You mean captain! But as I was about to remark as you interrupted, there is one thing lacking to our full measure of enjoyment."

"And that is?"

"A story."

"Humph—ah—yes—I see. You want a yarn, eh? Think all a sailor has to do is to spin a yarn upon demand. Well, you shall have one; but mind you, there is no love or sentimental spooning in it."

"So much the better, captain, for you would not fill the bill at all."

"Wouldn't, eh? And he chuckled softly as he threw a quick glance up aloft, took a squint to windward and commenced:

"It happened some ten years ago. I was foolishly then and hot blooded. It was on the Island of Ceylon, where a friend had invited me to spend a few days with him on his coffee estate, situated some 3,000 feet above the level of the sea. The bungalow was a fine, comfortable affair, possessing every comfort, with troops of white turbaned servants, who fairly anticipated one's wants.

daylight we should start in search of the huge mischievous monster.

"But with the morning a servant handed me a note from my host, stating that an unexpected summons to Kandy as witness in an important law matter had capsize all his plans, and that the hunt must wait until he returned, the precise date of which was uncertain. A few words of apology for the early and unceremonious leave taking followed, bidding me enjoy myself in the interim.

"My mind was made up in a trice. I would go after the elephant single handed, save my friend a deal of expense, reserving for myself the pleasure of exhibiting to him the ivory tusks as trophies of my skill.

"Remonstrances and words of warning from the Cingalese superintendent were unheeded, and, attended by Tamba, a well trained, alert native gun bearer, I sallied forth in the yet cool of the morning.

"The sun had not dried the dew from the magnificent foliage of the jungle, ere we were well into its depths, the wild, rank grass, with cane and bamboo, rising far above our heads. The sudden call of a peacock sounded shrill and discordant through the tangled surroundings. Tamba, his dark face glowing with excitement, whispered that it was the sure indication of a tiger being near.

"The information sent a queer sort of a chill down my spine. It was big game, awful big, for much so in fact, and I would have gone about on the other track had it not been for the enthusiasm of Tamba. It would never do for a Yankee to flunk and leave a native in possession of the field, so we pushed on, with my heart thumping like the throbs of the machinery of this vessel.

"There was a sudden commotion amid the waving, bending mass of foliage, a subdued growl, followed by a crash, as a magnificent specimen of a Ceylon tiger bounded from its cover, disappearing the next instant amid the underbrush of the forest.

"We followed the track as rapidly as possible, glancing warily from side to side. Again the peacock sounded its warning. My rifle was cocked and my nerves braced for the brute's onset, when a low exclamation from Tamba caused me to glance in his direction.

"Thumping out of the coarse grass, rolling over and over, was a cub, as full of antics as a kitten. The stout hunting spear of the native made short work of the youngster, and again we plunged into the interlarded intricacies of the Indian jungle. The grass encumbered our movements to such an extent that Tamba bade me wait a bit while he cut a passage through the tough network with his keen hunting knife. He soon disappeared, while I, my head close to the ground, was peering from side to side, when a frightful roar, apparently by my side, rang in my ears.

"There was a burst of hot, fetid air as the brute's breath poured into my face; a flash of ferocious gleaming eyes flashing with fires of hell; a tawny mane and lolling blood red tongue, and I felt myself jammed in the brute's iron jaws.

"Fortunately for myself, I had taken the precaution of donning a thick, tough hunting suit of Scotch stuff belonging to my friend. The tiger's jaws had a grip on the waistband, holding me firm as a vise, while my body, by a slight movement of the muscular neck, had been thrown across the broad, massive shoulders of the formidable beast.

"Growling and panting with every movement, the tiger trotted toward the inner recesses of the jungle, and it would be impossible for me to attempt to describe my sensations as the brute bore me rapidly through the underbrush. Rest assured, I was fully alive to the peril I was in. I was neither dazed nor paralyzed by fear, as a mouse is said to be when in the grip of a cat. On the contrary, all my faculties were on the qui vive, striving in vain to think of some plan by which I could escape certain death.

"The speed and enormous bounds of the brute appeared to increase as the ground became clearer. I was swayed from side to side, jostled and shaken until my bones ached and head throbbled from the wild, uneven motion. Every motion or effort on my part was met by a low, ominous growl, as with renewed vigor he bounded on, intent apparently upon reaching some favorite haunt, where a noonday meal off of my unfortunate body could be made.

"Occasionally there would be a pause—a slight cessation in the jolting and bouncing, enabling me to use my eyes for a moment. The nature and aspect of the jungle had undergone a change—a wonderful one. The ground was open, covered with stones and large boulders, while the long, terrible claws of the animal slid and scratched over surfaces of hard, smooth granite. Without doubt that awful journey—that ride to death—was nearly at an end. In all probability the tiger's lair had been chosen in some convenient rift or crevice in the stones, possibly a half hidden cave, where amid the rubbish and debris my bones would whiten and crumble to dust my fate remain a mystery to my friends, who would search in vain the deep aisles of the vast jungle for some trace of what had once been their friend and companion.

"The very train of thought nerved

my arm with renewed strength and desperation. In my struggles my hand came in contact with the butt of a heavy navy revolver slung to my belt. Strange that I had not thought of the weapon before. Upon that weapon depended my chances of life or death.

"Feeling for the left shoulder of the monarch of the jungle, and pointing the revolver as near the direction of the heart as I could judge, with the muzzle pressed close against his sinewy hide, I pulled the trigger three times in rapid succession.

"I felt myself rise high in the air; there was a prolonged and horrible roar, a grinding of the long formidable teeth, and I was sent rolling over and over, bruised, half stunned, bleeding and aching in every joint, as I sprawled and slipped along the corrugated surface of granite.

"I brought up, as sailors term it, 'all standing,' against a large boulder, to which I clung, until I regained, in a measure, my scattered faculties. By the aid of the rock I struggled to my feet, wiped the blood and dust from my eyes; at the same time the growl of the tiger saluted my ears.

"Ten yards distant, and directly in front of me, the brute was crouching, its huge head between its paws, eyes flashing fire, its claws working convulsively, while its tail jerked nervously from side to side as it prepared to spring upon me.

"A glance over my shoulder revealed the fact that to retreat was impossible. I was standing on the edge of a rocky declivity fully sixty feet in height. One chance of escape, a forlorn hope, flashed through my brain with the rapidity of lightning, and I assure you on occasions of great danger men form their conclusions very quickly.

"Climbing on the highest point of the boulder I stood erect and faced my implacable foe. There was a smothered snarl, a final combined twitching of the body, and then, with the fury of a thunderbolt, the huge mass launched itself in mid-air, pointing directly to me. I remember catching a glimpse of the infuriated beast, and the appearance it presented, brief though it was, will never fade from my memory.

The powerful jaws were stretched wide apart, the steel-like claws protruding far through the stubly fur; its mouth, wide open, displayed rows of glistening teeth, while mingled blood and foam dripped in large flecks from the tremendous jaws.

"Faint and weak, for the long continued tension on my nervous strength was beginning to tell, I yet managed to slide very nimbly from the pinnacle to the flat surface below, where I cowered, half fainting with terror and apprehension.

"With the swiftness of thought a shadow passed over me; there was a thud, a rattle of loose, rolling pebbles, and then all was still. I ventured to raise myself, peer over the edge of the cliff, and realized that I was saved.

"The tiger, as I had calculated when standing on the boulder, had gauged his leap in accordance with the position I had assumed, his strength and impetuosity carrying him headlong over the edge of the precipice. I beheld his huge form lying crushed and mangled amid the rocks below, silent and quiet enough at last. Then everything appeared to revolve before my dazed, bewildered eyes, a deathly sensation of sickness overpowered me, and all was blank.

"With the return of consciousness I found myself in Rawlings' bungalow. In good time I heard the denouement of my hunting adventure.

"Tamba, like the faithful servant that he was, at the first intimation of danger had turned to hasten to my assistance, but arrived just in time to behold the fierce brute hurrying into the jungle with my body clutched in his jaws. Hoping to be able to recover some souvenir to carry back to Sahib Rawlings, and at the same time to avenge my death if possible, he followed on the broad trail of the beast. He discovered me in a dead faint, and the tiger motionless at the base of the cliff.

"By the aid of some native wood-choppers a litter was improvised by which I was conveyed to my friend's bungalow. Brain fever followed, and months elapsed ere I left behind me the fragrant, delightful Island of Ceylon, but when I again found myself afloat, grazing back at that grand, majestic pinnacle known as Adam's peak, and marked the broad expanse of forest and jungle surrounding it, I shuddered—trembled in fact—and have never had the slightest desire to participate in a hunting again. Ladies, my yarn is spun out."

"Thanks, captain, thanks awfully for your interesting yarn; but may I ask you a question?"

"Certainly, as many as you please," responded the sailor as he glanced at her furtively from beneath the visor of his uniform cap.

"Did you ever hear of the marines?"

"The marines? What do you mean?"

"I thought perhaps you imagined you were relating your—ahem—story to a file of these credulous sea warriors."

"Ladies, do you take me for a blooming Munchausen? You are positively ungateful. But I perceive the purser desires my presence. The sun is over the foreyard, and I am obliged to assist in the very necessary ship's duty of 'making it so.'"

THAT WHEELBARROW CASE.

The Jury Disagreed—A Dictionary Needed.

Last Saturday A. Pinelli, a quiet, law-abiding citizen, was tried before Judge Cheney and a jury for stealing a wheelbarrow valued at $4. Deputy District Attorney R. M. Swain and an attorney from San Rafael appeared for the prosecution and Judge Breitenbach for the defense. The evidence showed that Mr. Pinelli took charge of the wheelbarrow and some blockmakers' tools for one Marengi, who had been working for him about four days and who subsequently left Sonoma. The defendant took charge of the tools openly and in the presence of several workmen and not feloniously and secretly as charged in the complaint. The complaining witness testified that he had bought the wheelbarrow from Giatano Noli, a fellow workman. It was also proven that Marengi had bought the identical wheelbarrow from the same person. In fact Noli admitted that he had sold the wheelbarrow three times which he swore had been given to him by his cousin Salemade, who had died in the County Hospital some time ago. The Court in behalf of defendant, charged the jury that before a conviction could be had they must be satisfied from the evidence that Pinelli took the wheelbarrow with "evil intent." This "evil intent" apparently was a stumbling block to most of the jurors, who evidently did not understand the meaning of plain English words, and a disagreement was the result. A spectator who listened to the evidence suggests that the next time the Court swears in a Sonoma jury to try a case that he furnish its members with a dictionary. Constable Sparks informs us that attorney Swain after the trial declared in his presence that there was no criminality shown in the case and that Pinelli should have been acquitted in five minutes. The average Sonoma juror is an uncertain quantity and as fickle as an April sun.

CARRIGER WILL CASE.

The Widow Wins Her Suit—An Appeal to be Taken to the Supreme Court.

The Wm. W. Carriger will contest, which was on trial all last week in the Superior Court at Santa Rosa, went to the jury last Saturday afternoon. The jury after due deliberation rendered a verdict which gives to the widow, Mrs. Kate Carriger, one-half of the estate of the late Wm. W. Carriger, which is worth about $9,000.

An appeal will be taken to the Supreme Court by the widows and sisters of deceased.

The jury stood nine for breaking the will and three against, which under the rule governing civil cases was just sufficient to give the case to the plaintiff. In other words, had the jury stood eight to four it would have been a mistrial.

MARRIED.

The Nuptials of Thomas Hopper, the Sonoma Banker, and Mrs. Eberly.

Thos. Hopper, one of the solid men of this county, was married to Mrs. Lulu M. Eberly in Santa Rosa last Sunday evening. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Carpenter at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Calver. The wedding was a quiet affair, only a few relatives and intimate friends of the contracting parties being present. Mr. Hopper is one of the wealthiest men in the county and is widely known. He is a pioneer and lived in Sonoma in 1850. He was considered to be the catch of the season and we deeply sympathize with those ladies of Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Sonoma, Healdsburg, Cloverdale, and not to forget Shellville, who had set their caps for him and got left.

Farmers' Institute.

The organization of a Farmers' Institute in Sonoma is being agitated at the present time. Already a number of our people are interesting themselves in the matter. Prof. Wickson of the State University, Berkeley, has written to one of the most prominent farmers in Sonoma Valley that he will be glad, on the part of the University, to visit Sonoma and assist in organizing an institute. The object of the society will be to disseminate knowledge regarding horticulture, agriculture and everything else connected with farming. The institute will be pre-eminently a society for our farmers, as well as for their wives and daughters as it is desirable that the meetings of the institute will be made entertaining as well as practically valuable by vocal and instrumental music, addresses, the reading of essays, etc. The project is a good one, and backed as it is by the State University, it should by all means meet with encouragement from every farmer in Sonoma Valley.

HOME FOR FEEBLE MINDED.

Grave Charges of Fraud Brought Against a Prominent Contractor.

Victor Hoffman Jr. of Oakland has brought charges against Andrew McElroy, contractor for the construction of the boys' wing of the Home for Feeble Minded at Glen Ellen. The charges, which have been filed with Secretary of State Colgan, set forth that after the contract for the construction of the Home for Feeble Minded Children at Glen Ellen had been awarded, the specifications were altered by the contractor, Andrew McElroy, in a number of important particulars, and that the work was done in conformity with these changed specifications.

These alleged frauds enabled the contractor to make an illicit profit estimated at not less than fifty thousand dollars out of the job, and which was far worse, left the building in a condition that constantly imperiled the lives of the unfortunate inmates, and in a condition that left it unfit for a safe habitation.

It is said that where the specifications called for first-quality Oregon pine the contractor substituted a poor article of Guerneville pine—declared to be the cheapest and flimsiest material known to the trade. In order to make the elevator fireproof—a most important and a vital provision—the specifications required that iron lathing should be used, but the cheapest kind of ordinary wooden laths are said to have been substituted.

For roof-sheating second quality flooring was required, but instead the contractor substituted Guerneville "No. 6 surface," said to be "the cheapest kind of stuff the timbermen can furnish." Five other charges enumerate instances in which high grade material was required and agreed upon, and the cheapest and most worthless was substituted.

It is further declared that these facts have been familiar to building circles for a long while, and have been matters of free gossip.

In addition to the charges made by Hoffman, others are made by Dennis Jordan, an eminent contractor, who, being engaged to examine the work, detailed twenty-seven particulars in which the State was being robbed by the contractors on this work. To which P. J. O'Connor, the architect, added his testimony on Tuesday, by filing with the attorney-general charges that in this connection the State was robbed of thousands of dollars by the substitution of the where lead and mortar was called for; common mortar instead of concrete; the proportion of cement in the mortar was less than was necessary for good work, and that the wood was of very inferior quality.

The Controller says that not one dollar has been paid McElroy since the charges were preferred against him and that he will not receive a cent until due investigation is made. It is probable that an investigation will be made at an early date.

Debate, resolved, "That the Printing Press Has Done More for Mankind Than the Steam Engine." Affirmative, Chas. Champlin and Emily Potter. Negative, Chas. Lowell and Stella Johnson. Song, "Perri Merri Dictum Domini," society. All are invited to attend these weekly exercises.

Suicided.

Manager W. Losee of the De Long ranch, near Novato, committed suicide between 5 and 6 o'clock A. M. last Saturday. A revolver was the weapon used in the rash act and the victim is supposed to have been temporarily insane at the time. The circumstances of the affair left no room for doubt that it was a clear case of suicide. He was a man of considerable means and owned, with other property, a half-interest in a ranch in the vicinity of Sebastopol. He leaves a wife and several children.

Feeble and capricious appetites are best regulated by the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. They do not debilitate, by excessive stimulation; but cause the stomach, liver and bowels to perform their functions properly. As an after-dinner pill, they are unequalled.

Don't sicken people with that bad bread. Take Simmons Liver Regulator.

The Donahue Road.

There is a strong probability of an early sale of the San Francisco and North Pacific railroad.

A week ago upon motion in the superior court of San Rafael the order of sale of the personal property of the late J. M. Donahue, consisting of railway stock of the railroad, was vacated and a new petition filed which will come up for hearing to-morrow.

The legatees under this will are, it is said, very anxious and determined to sell this railway stock and procure their legacies, and it may be safely concluded that the San Francisco and North Pacific railroad will be in the hands of new owners before the end of January, 1893.

There are several syndicates looking sharply at this road which pays 6 per cent on $6,000,000 and it is now thought that beyond all doubt that the stock will bring $20 per share.

James M. Donahue's estate has 42,000 shares and the Seligman's hold the remaining shares.—San Francisco Call.

Contestant's Costs.

Mrs. Kate Carriger has filed her claim for costs in the Superior Court for expenses in the Carriger will case which was tried in Santa Rosa last week. Her claim amounts to $463.

"Kissing" in Sleeping Cars.

There are probably not many travelers on the railroads who know of the "kissing" clause in the rules of the sleeping car companies. In the Wagner rules it is provided that "passengers who have purchased berths will not be prohibited from visiting friends en route to share their accommodations. For persons so invited the regular form of berth check will be issued punching out the cipher and writing the word visitor plainly across the face of the check. This rule does not admit of an invitation being extended so that more than two persons occupy one berth. On trains where there are two or more cars of this company, visiting will be allowed between the passengers who have purchased accommodations in either car, provided inconvenience is not done to any of the other occupants of the cars."—New York Times.

What Women Hate.

If there is one thing on this earth that a woman hates to do it is to ask money of a man. He may hand out the sum requested with great willingness, yet the sting and humiliation of being obliged to go to him for sums large and small, gail a woman who is at all sensitive until she will many times go without actual necessities rather than place herself in the position of a suppliant for alms. Young girls dread the ordeal of getting a new gown from father, wives hesitate over a demand for household expenses, and all women, old and young, if the truth were told, would rather have a business arrangement by which on a certain date they should receive a stated amount, no matter how small, than obtain larger sums by cajolery or petition.—Philadelphia Times.

SSS CURES MALARIAL POISON

LIFE HAD NO CHARMS.

For three years I was troubled with malarial poison, which caused my appetite to fail, and I was greatly reduced in flesh, and lost all its charms. I tried mercurial and potash remedies, but to no effect. I could get no relief. I then decided to try SSS. A few bottles of this wonderful medicine made a complete and permanent cure, and I now enjoy better health than ever. J. A. Rice, Ottawa, Kan.

A Singular Drink.

I remember the story of one wine party which met at the Scott's Arms at Barr. I dare say Mr. Henry Irving knows the house, for he is president of the literary society there. The tale was told me by the landlord. Three charter masters sat at a table in the bar, and old Poulney overheard their whispered talk.

"Didst ever drink port, Jim?"

"No, what is it?"

"Why, port—port wine; it's a stuff as the gentle folks as fond on."

"I reckon it'll be main expensive then."

"Oh, we can stand it amongst the three on us. Got any port wine, landlord?"

"Yes, some of the finest in the country."

"What's it run to?"

"Seven and six a bottle."

"They figured it out," the landlord told me, "with a bit of a stump of an old pencil on the top o' the table, and when they'd made up their minds as seven and sixpence was half a crown apiece among the three on 'em, they ordered a bottle. I sent my man down the cellar for it, and I went out to look at my pigs."

"When I come back again there they was sittin' vry mouthed an looking at one another, wif some muddy looking stuff in the glasses afore 'em. 'Gentlemen,' I says, 'ye don't seem to like your liquor.' 'Like it,' says one on 'em; 'if this is the stuff the gentle folks like drinkin, the gentle folks is welcome to it for we.' I turns to my man, and 'Bill,' says I, 'where did ye get this bottle o' port from?' 'Why,' he says, 'I got it from the fast bin on the left hand side.' 'Why, you cussed old idiot,' I says, 'ye browt 'em mushroom ketchup!'"

—Christie Murray in St. James' Budget.

A Frog's Adventure with a Mouse.

Cuba Myers had been considerably vexed by a mouse which daily enjoyed a free lunch in the pretzel basket. Traps were set, but the mouse was too sharp and defied all attempts to capture it. One morning Mr. Myers heard the mouse in the basket and determined to try a new plan to get rid of it. He picked up the basket very carefully and carried it over to a box in which were several big frogs. Holding the basket over the box he shook it vigorously, expecting to have the mouse drop into the box, when he would kill it.

The programme was carried out so far as shaking the mouse into the box, but when that was accomplished a new actor entered upon the stage in the shape of one of the frogs, which at once went for the mouse. It was a stern chase, but did not last long, the frog catching the mouse and swallowing it head first. In one second the tip of the mouse's tail protruded from the mouth of the frog, which blinked with the contentment born of a full stomach. —Lancaster (Pa.) Examiner.

Heavy Hats and Baldness.

"Fifty years ago it was an uncommon thing to see a young man with a skating rink on his head," said Dr. Ezra Howland, now at the Lindell. "Now most men begin to grow bald before reaching forty, and many have little hair left at thirty. This is due chiefly to the heavy head coverings now worn. Did you ever see a bald-headed Indian? The ancient Greeks and Romans went much with their heads uncovered, and if we can depend upon the counterfeit presentments of them left to us, baldness was very rare among them. The hat most injurious to the hair is the soft felt. The heavy cap worn by many northern people is also a great promoter of baldness. The high silk or 'plug' hat is perhaps least injurious of any headgear now worn. I do not believe that it was intended that the head should have any covering but the hair. Baldness is the penalty we pay for persistent violation of the laws of nature." —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"German Syrup"

For Coughs & Colds.

John F. Jones, Edom, Tex., writes: "I have used German Syrup for the past six years, for Sore Throat, Cough, Colds, Pains in the Chest and Lungs, and let me say to anyone wanting such a medicine—German Syrup is the best."

B. W. Baldwin, Carnesville, Tenn., writes: "I have used your German Syrup in my family, and find it the best medicine I ever tried for coughs and colds. I recommend it to everyone for these troubles."

R. Schmalhausen, Druggist, of Charleston, Ill., writes: "After trying scores of prescriptions and preparations I had on my files and shelves, without relief for a very severe cold, which had settled on my lungs, I tried your German Syrup. It gave me immediate relief and a permanent cure."
